

A map of Illinois with its county boundaries outlined in black. A large, irregularly shaped region in the eastern half of the state is shaded in yellow. This yellow region covers parts of several counties, including Cook, DuPage, Kane, Kendall, DeKalb, and Will. Within this yellow area, there is a smaller, more concentrated area of orange shading in the northeast, near the Indiana border. Additionally, there are several counties in the southern part of the state, including Jackson, Madison, and St. Clair, that are shaded in gray. The rest of the state's counties are unshaded (white).
